Yesterday morning we had another big white frost, the second one of decided character, besides three previous light ones. Surely these visitations will relieve our sister towns.

Six hundred dollars worth of poultry, butter, eggs and other needful articles of food, left here yesterday on the Pacific railroad for the sick in Marshall. One of our poor citizens, a German, sent a dozen chickens, worth in this market three dollars.

A gentleman of Dallas has in contemplation the preparation and publication of a history of Dallas county from its first settlement down to the present date. In this work, if published, will appear the names of all the early settlers of this county under the Peters' colony grant, as well as those who settled on other headrights. Such a work would be invaluable to our people and a grateful memorial to the sorrowing children of the early pioneers who reclaimed this beautiful country from the wild savages.

DEMOCRATS OF DALLAS COUNTY!

If you have not registered go and do so at once. Unless precluded by mistaken notions of duty you must realize that every vote will count in the coming election so near at hand. Not only a high sense of patriotism, but worthy pride should induce every citizen of Dallas county to register and vote. If all will do so, it will be demonstrated that Dallas is the largest, or at least one of the three largest counties in the State in population, as we know it is in wealth.

The people of Southern Texas, overrun by hundreds of misguided negroes, led on by white mercenaries, look to our white counties of Northern Texas to relieve them of oppression. Will you will a single white Democrat of Dallas county, refuse to do his part towards relieving our brethren of the oldest and historical part of Texas from the rule of negroes, carpetbaggers and political swindlers? No, fellow citizens, do not commit this great wrong. Register! vote! and let us all be free.

GEORGE B. ERATH, the old pioneer of McLennan county, known afire as the "Flying Dutchman of the Frontier," is the Democratic candidate for Senator from the Waco district. The Radicals say the Democrats are opposed to foreigners; a lie too palpable to excite anything but contempt. At this time the Democrats have the following foreigners as candidates in this State:

J. J. Gross, German, for Commissioner of the Land Office.
Joseph Dwyer, Irishman, for Senator from the San Antonio district.
George B. Erath, German, for Senator from the Waco district.

Edward P. Linn, Irishman, for Representative from the Victoria district.
A German for Representative from the Colorado district.

A. L. Kessler, for Representative from the Comal district.
Erich Schmidt, German, for Representative from the Houston district.

But the list is too long. This is enough to show that wherever merit exists, Democrats select their candidates regardless of birth or nationality.

A VALUABLE WORK.

Messrs. Lawson and Edmondson are now preparing, and will have ready for delivery during the month of December, a volume to be called the Dallas Directory. Besides business cards and a full list of all business and professional men, it will contain a brief history of the town and county of Dallas, with a list of about one hundred of the first settlers of the county, prepared by Messrs. John Henry Brown and Son.

A large edition will be printed. The volume will be handsomely gotten up, and will be sold at two dollars per copy. Persons wishing to subscribe can leave their names at this office or with either of the following firms: Franklin & Fenn, Main street; Dr. A. M. Cochran, Elm street; Adams & Leonard, Elm street; City Bank, Commerce street; Major Eugene W. Baylor, John Henry Brown & Son, Elm street; Pierce & Lyle, Main street, or J. E. Barkley.

Curious Guns.

The Baltimore American, speaking of a collection of guns in a store in that city, says:
Two of these are unique affairs, brought home recently by one of our worthy citizens, Mr. T. H. Oliver, who spent twelve years traveling in all parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. They are of great length and of the most antique construction. One of them has a barrel five feet long, made of the finest steel, curiously carved and inlaid with gold and platinum. The lining is elaborately and beautifully done. The stock of this gun is of ebony, inlaid with silver, pearl and ivory. The flint lock of antique pattern, with springs and works all outside the plate, is finely inlaid with platinum.

The barrel and stock are bound together with six solid, elaborately wrought silver bands, and all the mountings are of silver and gold. To the stock is affixed a butt-plate of ivory, very handsomely inlaid. The bore of the gun is five-eighths of an inch. On its side is an elegant written Arabic inscription, that nobody has been able to decipher. The gun was made in Morocco, where there are twenty-five gun-makers, who with the crudest implements, turn out guns that have great reputation in all Northern Africa. Such a gun as this one could not be had in this country for less than $1,000. The other of the two guns was made in Algiers, has a similar immensely long barrel, a flint lock inlaid with platinum and ivory, steel butt-plate, and stock inlaid with silver and coral. This gun is not so fine as the other, but is very curious.

A Lesson for Boys.

Boys who disturb camp meetings by crying "Amen" in the wrong place, and remarking "Glory" with more zeal than judgment, should read and ponder the fate of thirteen small boys in Kansas. These thirteen ill-vised disturbers of a Kansas camp meeting by insisting upon shouting "Amen" when a very muscular preacher, who prides himself on his voice, was singing a hymn. The preacher bore it for some time, but finally becoming filled with righteous wrath, he descended from the pulpit, and never once interrupted his hymn, successively reversed and spanked the thirteen small boys. As his avenging hand descended and the dust of the small boys filled the air, the rest of the congregation shouted in rapture, and encouraged him with "Go on, brother, go on." Then he returned to the pulpit, still singing, and those boys went half a mile away, behind a haystack and lay down with their faces to the ground, weeping bitterly.

Fight with a Horse.

A teamster, named Joe Allen, lately purchased a horse in Genesee county, Mich., and finding the animal ugly and obstinate, prepared to break him into subjection. Arming himself with a heavy whip and a club, Allen went into the stable about 10 o'clock Sunday morning and proceeded to business. The animal bit him as he tried to enter the stall, and Allen stood back and "peeled" him with the whip. The horse kicked and pawed for awhile, and then sagged back, snatched the halter and came out on the floor with a business look in his eye which was truly appalling. After retreated back after seeing an open mouth snap together about an inch from his nose. By shouting and whipping he frightened the horse back a few feet, and then got under the stairs, where, for about half an hour, or until his wife could gather a crowd, he was held prisoner, having all he could do to keep the horse from dragging him out.

A Darwinian Monkey.

Another illustration of Darwinism was recently furnished in the case of two newly arrived monkeys from China, which were lodged in a San Francisco bar-room, one of them being kept in a cage, and the other left at liberty. During the night the latter hominoid first considerably landed in a bottle of rum to his imprisoned brother, who thereupon became comatose intoxicated, and then proceeded to get frightfully drunk and disorderly himself, breaking decanters and glasses, throwing an empty bottle at the head of the bar keeper on that official's entrance, and otherwise comporting himself, as his master remarked, "for all the world just like a Christian."
